

HEMP PAPER SAVES TREES... & CREATES JOBS

Farming 10,000 Acres of Hemp
Will Provide as Much Paper,
Building Materials & Pulp as 41,000 Acres of Forest.

In 1916, the U.S. Department of Agriculture issued a dire warning:

America does not have enough forest land to last to the end of this century, given our vast appetite for paper, building materials, cellulose and other useful wood pulp products.

However, Bulletin 404 also offered a profitable solution: Grow more hemp!

Virtually anything we make of wood can also be made with hemp. But with its much higher sustainable yield, we can enjoy a net gain in commercial productivity and an overall growth in our standard of living.

Selective cutting of trees, combined with hemp agriculture means more jobs for Americans.

Careful forest management would place old growth forests off-limits to cutting and ensure a future of quality wood products with jobs for loggers, while the hemp industries create thousands of new jobs throughout the economy. Yet today, as the last stands of ancient forests are being destroyed, state and federal regulations prohibit American farmers and businesses from using this sustainable resource.

It's time for our government to take its own advice. It's time to stop clear cutting trees and go back to harvesting hemp, like Presidents Washington and Jefferson did. Or our children will not have trees or jobs.

Contact your elected officials and demand that they act now to restore hemp to American agriculture and industry. Save our farms, jobs, mills and forests.
